

Irish Field Names

Introduction by Joan Mullen, translations by Dr Nollaig O Muraile

The Project Steering Group had an interest in Irish field names from the beginning. Volunteers were asked to spell unusual or Irish field names phonetically. If they wished they could offer several possible spellings for the same name. This was intended to give a better feel for the pronunciation of the name. The Steering Group was aware that it would be better to record the Irish field names as spoken in each locality to enable more accurate translation. However, resource limitations meant that this has simply not been possible to date.

As field names were entered onto the database names that appeared to derive from Irish were noted. If there was doubt about a name it was marked. This was to enable the Irish names to be extracted as a distinct group. Dr. Nollaig O Muraile from NUI Galway, an Irish place names expert, agreed to assist the project in examining some of the Irish field names. In February 2012 a group of about 1,200 Irish field names and their details were extracted and given to Dr. O'Muraile to study. He returned some months later with his translations and thoughts on the Irish field names submitted.

Dr. O'Muraile found that some field names had been incorrectly marked as being Irish names, some were in fact Hiberno-English words. Others he found difficult to translate with any degree of certainty without hearing an oral recording of the name. He marked each name translated according to the degree of certainty. Those without a question mark, he was quite certain about. Others were marked with one, or in some cases two question marks depending on the level of uncertainty.
